Coverage means the extent of our commitment to respond to any claim relating to the siding.

First recipient of the transfer means the first individual or entity to which an interest of the initial purchaser in the building on which the coating was initially installed is transferred or sold voluntarily or involuntarily as a gift or as a result of a sale, or by the operation of a law after the initial coating installation.

Purchase and installation price means (a) the total initial cost of the coatings which is defective or which must be replaced plus (b) the total initial cost of labor for the installation of the coating that is defective. Aging caused by bad weather means the changes caused by exposure to sunlight, rain, air pollution, variations in temperature and other atmospheric conditions.

Non-uniform ageing caused by bad weather, such as checker boarding on the coating, means uneven or non-uniform change in color of contiguous elements of the coating under non-uniform exposure to the sun or natural radiations, rain, normal temperature variations or other atmospheric conditions.
